University News to City Papers Changes Much in Forty Years

Three-fourths of the male membership of the student body of the University of Missouri made their weekly pilgrimage to the Columbia brewery Saturday afternoon and again succeeded in consuming an average of eight pints each before sunset, after which they demolished three sections of a rail fence and staged a bull fight on the courthouse lawn.

It is expected that the owners of the brewery will erect an adequate garden near their plant in the near future so that the frolicking of the students may be conducted with a minimum of danger to innocent bystanders within a radius of ten blocks.

The report that Joe Johnson, freshman in the University, died in the hospital last night as a result of hazing at the hands of indignant sophomores who charged Johnson with failure to drop on his knees and grovel as one of their number passed, has been branded as untrue by medical authorities.

Johnson is suffering from a severe scalp wound but there is no concussion of the brain as was at first believed. Immediately after the accident University authorities met with representative sophomores and obtained a pledge from them, A. A. Sims, returned to her home in Sturgeon this afternoon.

members of the faculty who were in service at that time. The difficult part of the matter, according to the veterans of the teaching force, was that such items as the above, each of them in fact, were based largely upon incidents that happened at the University.

The particular period of the school's life from which they are drawn is one when, it is said, the University was suffering from the effects of an unsavory reputation. Stories got out of stunts by the students and conscientious mammas and papas sent their children to universities of other states.

It is difficult for the present-day student to imagine any large portion of the student body engaged in collectively drinking itself under the table. Yet, this very thing used to happen when Columbia supported a brewery. Further, there was a time when the University of Missouri included a vineyard among its possessions. From the grapes wine was manufactured by employees of the state and the liquid stored in the basement of Jesse Hall. It is told of the students of the time that they not only guzzled the brewer's amber product but, on occasion, broke into the University building and stole enough state-made wine to throw a party.

The hair-raising tales of the University of Missouri are, just begun with such as the foregoing. There are faculty members in the University who could hold a mass meeting for three hours with nothing but anecdotes and still not run out of material at the end.

WOMAN BUYS 1,000 FROCKS

Gives Employment to Many by Lavishly Spending Her Wealth.

By CLYDE A. BEALS
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

LONDON, (By Mail).—Harken unto this New Arabian Night, the Tale of the Thousand Gowns; how a portly dame forsook her modest calling to become a grand lady; how she gathered myraid changes of raiment; how she took her harem and fine raiment and went to live in the land of London; how the scribes gathered and spread her name and the fame of her raiment far over land and sea; and how for the good of the people she was induced to be filmed for the movies.

Now, in the land of Nottingham dwelt Mrs. Margaret Smith-Wilkinson, she whom the stars spinning in their high courses had foredoomed to become great. As the forty-seventh summer of her birth sped apace, she looked about her and sighed for fine raiment, for the jewels, rare plumes and furs from the ends of the earth, which gladden the hearts of women.

For, in the land of Nottingham, had she not labored long and with great faith, and had not her labors built a great sanatorium where the great and good from the far countries gathered to bathe and to steam off the juice of the grape, and, for thus, she relates, had they not also paid her many shekels?

Wherefore, then, did she not go forth from the land of Nottingham, even unto Paris and unto London, there to taste of the fruits of the earth and to seep out precious raiment, and to deck herself in it, thus to become a great lady? All this she would do.

So it came to pass that she fared forth and took with her, her modest harem of one husband, the third whom the stars had foredoomed to succeed into her good graces. Lithe and youthful was he, with hair black as the starless night, of probably twenty, in laceless brown shoes of the finest suede.

So it came to pass that the portly dame with her modest harem gathered her great store of fine raiment, of the finest furs, of gorgeous and beautiful cloth trimmed with beaten silver or with delicate embroidery or with precious jewels that the hands of multitudinous hand-maidens had assembled.

And her fame spread with the winds, and the scribes came and hearkened unto her words and learned that in the goodness of her heart she had chosen to have clothes many and rare to provide employment for the people; for the sight of the people without bread in their mouths or gold or silver in their hands

Friday and Saturday—"A Virgin Paradise" is the story of a beautiful girl who grew to maidenhood alone on a savage island, her only companion being the lions, monkeys and other denizens of the jungle. The picture was made on a beautiful tropical island.
